Standing Committee of European Doctors Event hosted by the Portuguese Presidency

Agenda

The COVID-19 pandemic accelerated the use of telemedicine across Member States where it is rapidly becoming a feature of day-to-day medical practice. Doctors and patients have experienced the benefits and opportunities of telemedicine, for example by home-monitoring, teletriage and remote consultations, but also its risks and limitations. This panel intends to examine the use of telemedicine in different Member States, shedding a light on European Doctors’ concerns and recommendations. The panel will also address the support that medical associations and the government could provide, examining whether the future is bright for telemedicine.
